

Danielle is an occupational therapist and senior therapist at the College Station clinic. She grew up in the San Francisco Bay Area and went to OT school at the University of Illinois at Chicago. She loves being outside, hiking, playing with her puppy, and baking. She became an OT after undergoing several sports-related injuries and spending years in rehabilitation. It showed her how big of a difference a therapist could make in getting me motivated to return to the hobbies that she loved. She particularly noted how occupational therapy was a perfect balance of creativity, science, and compassion. She enjoys working on executive functioning and coping strategies to help children reach their full potential and be able to manage challenging situations.
